

Now this may seem like the logical thing you should do, but remember that cheapest is not always the best value in the long term. Your house is most probably your biggest asset, and in Perth, with real estate prices escalating, the quality of paint job, and the appearance of your house can make a huge difference to its value.

This is not something you want to risk a shoddy job on. Spending an extra 10 or 20% for a quality job may well be an extremely worthwhile investment.

Any painter in Perth can start a job. It takes a professional with the proper budget to purchase the best materials, pay his overhead and leave with a satisfied customer. Most likely the low bidder won't be around when there are complications or you need customer service. Remember, you get what you pay for.